SUPPLANT: A flood of Western-oriented comment approaches unanimity in support of the President's "historic decision." Among other things, his "far-reaching initiative" and "resolute attitude" are praised as showing that "Truman has shouldered his responsibilities as a great statesman." Some of the comment continues to be tempered by expressions of uneasiness about the possibility of a larger war; but such expressions are considerably less frequent and less fearful than was the case prior to the decision. Realistic appraisals of the risks involved are paralleled by determined relief that the free world is finally making a stand against Communist aggression. A new element of Western Undersiness, however, has to do with the "slowness of the results from the American intervention." And at least one Soviet-controlled source (Radio Leipzig) has boasted about the North Forestee's "victorious progress" despite the use of American planes.

Radio Moscow distributes, without comment, the official Soviet reply to the original U.N. resolution on Korea. Yesterday's PRAVDA article continues to be widely broadcast. The Soviet radio's only other independent comments have been in the form of enother: FR*FDA: article and a TASS dispatch, both designed to demonstrate that the "American directed" South Korean attempt "to invade the north was preceded by lengthy and intensive actions." Monitored North Korean broadcasts have not yet mentioned the President's decision. Prompaig makes much of Seoul's capture. Satellite radios, especially in Eastern Germany, continue their fearmongering campaign to arouse the "peace partisans" against Truman's most recent : attempt "to kindle a third world war." They hav to the line that the alleged South Koroon invasion of the north had been long prepared by the manager and that the AMERICA'S "LONG AND INTENSIVE PREPARATIONS" AGAINST NORTH KOREA: Neither Mc soow ner its Satellites (including Pyongyang) makes much of an attempt at factual documentation of the fiction that North Korea was the victim of an attempted invasion from the scath. Instead, they try to give the idea an aura of credibility by using a propaganda line which takes the "attempted invasion" for granted and which at the same time surrounds it with a serven of secondary alleged facts tending to distract attention from the central issue. The abovementioned PRAYDA and TASS pieces, for example, utilize foreign press sources to "prove" that the American imperialists had long prepared for the "invasion" by aiding in the organization and development of the South Korean army; but they do not once attempt to document the idea that such an "invasion" actually occurred. PRAYDA's "evidence" consists, as ong other things, of a recent ASSOCIATED PRESS photograph. According to PRAYDA's Berlin correspondent, "examining a map of the forthcoming military actions." He is surrounded by American officers, one of whom is "surveying through field glasses the country in front of nim..... the territory of the Korean People's Democratic Republic." Korolkov explairs "what it is all about," as follows:

"The camers... pictures on the demarcation line the last stages of the preparation for an attack on North Korea. Surrounded by his officers and by soldings of the Syngman Rhee mercenary army, Dulles is personally inspecting the South Korean troops already held in a state of military preparedness."

For its "svidence," the TASS dispatch refers to the activities of the American military advisory mission in Korea, to a statement by Dulles while recently in Korea to the effect that "the eyes of the free world are fixed upon you (Koreans)," and to Synguen Rhee's 1 March "assertion that he would never know peace or rest until Korea was united, presumably under control of reactionary puppets directed from Washington." All of this, charges TASS, "clearly demonstrates... the long and intensified preparations preceding the adventurist effort... to invade" North Korea.

WESTERN-ORIENTED CONCERN WITH THE "SLOWNESS OF RESULTS" IN KOREA: At least five comments express this concern. One Swedish paper doubts whether American air and sea forces are competent to deal with the North Korean attack. Another "says that an American intervention in Korea which did not lead to the intended result would in many ways be even more dissistences than U.S. passivity." This feeling, according to an AFP dispatch, is also prevalent among Western diplomatic circles in Tokyo where it is believed that "if the North Korean advance cannot be nullified soon the Americans will have to sent in land forces." Britain's MEMS CHRONICLE says that "the American position may have to be reviewed if Korea is to be held"; and the MIRROR and MAIL both "consider that if ground forces in Korea prove necessary, they should be put in."

OTHER COMMENT FROM WESTERN-CRIENTED SOURCES: As indicated above, reactions from Westernoriented sources are preponderantly favorable to the President's decision. There are, however, a few that are not. One of the most surprising of these comes from Radio Madrid, whose commentator Perez Madrigal proclaims a plague on both the houses of Roscow and Washington. Explaining that the Korean situation represents a naked clash retween "two giant forces which aspire to world begenony" and claiming that South Korea is no nore free or democratic than North Korea, he "condenns... the universal treachery which is being committed against (one of) the most wretched countries in the world." Another critical response comes from the Indonesian radio at Jakarta. According to it, "American prestige in Asia has suffered on account of the Korean affair, whatever the final outcome." There is no elaboration of this viewpoint. But resentment against great-power interference in Asiatic countries is implied.

SOUTH KOREAN ERCADCASTS: An instance of apparently over-optimistic reporting is Radio Pasan's announcement, while the Secul radio was still relaying Pyongyang briadcasts, that "Secul has been recaptured completely and public order secured" and that the "Government, which has been temporarily staying in Taejon, returned to the capital early this morning (29 June)."

NOTE: It has just been learned that the PRAVDA reply to the President's desision was broadcast by Moscow in at least 22 different languages and 45 different times on 28 June.
